ARGUMENT.

It is the birthday of the Princess Angeline, and holiday is being kept at the Court of the King, her father. The Fairies from the neighbouring nooks and crannies arrive to pronounce blessings on the Princess. Envy, a cast-out fairy, comes unexpectedly and pronounces her doom. According to the laws of Fairyland, "the last wish pronounced governs all others," and Fairy Protection, suspecting that Envy has come for no good purpose, conceals herself till Envy has finished, and though unable to entirely contravert her cruel words, she changes the death of the Princess to a sleep of a hundred years, and that she may not awaken alone, she causes sleep to fall on the friends also.

Meanwhile, by the strange conduct of the Men in the Moon, preparations are going on for the fulfilment of the prophecy. Prince Luna, son of the Man in the Moon, resolves on a change at any cost, and enters the new 100-ton gun, risking annihilation on a voyage through the air to the earth, rather than remain in the moon. Happily, he arrives on the earth, and is taken in charge of the Little Old Men of the Wood, who lead him to the Sleeping Princess, and all ends in the usual happiness.
